Your quote in there reminds me of something you said in Avon. "...we tend to focus on the negative things....but in a lot of cases, folks are doing a lot of great work to improve water quality."

I think that language helps ease a lot of the audience's anxiety and edginess. DEQ/EPA comes into their hometown and tells them how messed up their waters are all due to their actions. That one sentence reminds them of the broader picture, one that's not so bleak. I gotta remember to quote that next time I'm on the stand.

Nice job, maybe next meeting you can get on the front page though like Betsy does.

Here's today's article about the public meeting I had this week for TMDLs in the Lower Gallatin in case you're interested. The meeting went pretty well. As expected, most of the comments came from the city of Bozeman about meeting the nutrient criteria. The reporter did a pretty good job of not focusing the article on that aspect though.
